The next point was that Her Majesty at once on the execution of the treaty assumed and had continued to exercise complets ownership of all the land in the island entirely regardless of previously existing titles, and that from the commencement of the history of the Colony there had been no such thing as freehold property of any description. The Crown continued to be supreme owner o the entire property of the whole island and over the leaseholders holding by leases from the crown. The first legislation on the subject of the introduction of English law into the colony was Ordinance 6 of 1845. Of course there was the earlier ordinance No. 15 of 1844, section 3 of which enacted that the law of England should be in full force except where the same was inapplicable to the local circumstances of the colony and of its inhabitants. This ordinance, however, was disallowed and was only in force from the time it passed until the disallowance arrived from England. THE DANGERS OF TINNED FOOD.

Two cases reported this week (says the Overland Mail of Nov. 25) may will excite some alarm among the consumers of tinned articles of diet. In one care an officer pertook of a samine, which operated speedily and fetally as a very virulent poison. Some of it, taken from his stomach and administered to rate killed them. So did small doses of another sardine found in the tin. Last night the Medical Officer to Hampstead Vestry reported a case of an extraordinary character. Agentleman, his wife and two children sat down to breakfast on a freshivopened tinned tongue and anomelette. The tongue looking and tasting disagraeable was discarded, but the fork with which it had been pricked was used to divide the omelette. The results are thus reported:-
